Macy's Asian Pacific American Heritage Month celebrations will include special performances, food and other cultural elements with a primary focus on moderated conversations covering beauty, media and food. For these multifaceted conversations, an array of nationally recognized influencers, as well as local cultural tastemakers will join the festivities as featured guests, discussing the impact, legacy and traditions that have helped them succeed in their fields.

"Macy's is thrilled to host this talented array of special guests for our upcoming celebration of Asian Pacific American Heritage Month," said Jose Gamio, Macy's vice president of Diversity &

Inclusion Strategies. “They are important, fresh voices who bring unique and relevant perspectives to these discussions and celebrations. We are honored to share their important stories, foods and expertise in conversations about Asian and Pacific American culture with our customers and communities.”

Multi-hyphenate Eddie Huang will join the Macy’s Herald Square event in New York City for a discussion about Asian representation in the media. Huang, a successful chef, restaurateur, author, food personality, producer and attorney, is also the man behind two successful television ventures that highlight the Asian-Pacific experience and representation in popular culture. His memoir, Fresh Off the Boat, was adapted by ABC-TV for their hit primetime television show of the same name, and he currently stars in Viceland’s Huang’s World, a travel and food television show exploring food, race, identity and multiculturalism. Food from Baohaus, Huang’s Taiwanese restaurant in New York City, will also be served at the event.

“Asian Pacific American Heritage Month is an important moment of reflection, and I am excited to join Macy’s in honoring both the heritage of the past and the innovation of the future,” said Eddie Huang.

From a traditional Polynesian luau and a cooking demonstration on the evolution of Korean food with chef Bill Kim to beauty sessions with leading influencers Stephanie Villa of Soothing Sista, Morgan Stewart of The Beauty Breakdown, and Jenn Im, Macy’s Asian Pacific Heritage events will showcase a spectrum of traditions and modern cultural influence brought forth by the next generation of tastemakers in beauty and food.
